Librarian Receives Award from NMSU's American Indian Program

NMSU librarian Monica A. Kirby recently received an appreciation award from New Mexico State University's American Indian Program. According to program director Dr. Donald D. Pepion and student counselor Allen J. Riley, the award demonstrates appreciation of Ms. Kirby's support to the American Indian Program and American Indian students at NMSU. As the library's social sciences/outreach librarian, Ms. Kirby regularly forwards articles and scholarship information of interest and value to the students in the program. A former social worker, Ms. Kirby has been a member of the library faculty since 2000. She has also been awarded an Association of College and Research Libraries (ACRL) national conference scholarship, serves on the ACRL bylaws committee, serves on the American Library Association council committee on professional ethics, and is active in campus and community service.
