Endeavor Reaches 500 with NMSU Library

Endeavor Information Systems Incorporated of Des Plaines, Illinois, announced on July 30 that the New Mexico State University Library is the 500th library to purchase Voyager as their integrated library system. Endeavor's Voyager will replace the library's VTLS system.

Voyager will make the library's local data more accessible to users, and will provide easy access to the remote resources of a networked world. The system provides the full range of functionality required by today's library, including a user-friendly online public access catalog as well as circulation, course reserves, cataloging, serials, acquisitions, interlibrary loan, system administration, and reporting functions. A unique feature is Voyager's Citation Server subsystem, which supports bibliographical databases in a customized format.

David Myers, Interim Dean of the University Library, sums up the feelings of the Library staff: "The NMSU Library chose the Endeavor system because it offers the best opportunities to integrate our traditional book collections with our expanding electronic resources, and it also addresses the needs and contributions of our branch campuses. We are excited by the enhanced services that we will be able to offer current and future library users with both the basic system and the optional modules. We look forward to a successful association with Endeavor for many years to come."

Endeavor has over 260 contracts serving 500 libraries. Jane Burke, President and CEO stated, "Endeavor has experienced tremendous market acceptance and growth since our inception in 1994. It's a testament to our ability to listen to our customers, then develop and deliver the rich functionality our customers require. We are more than pleased to add New Mexico State University to our list of customers. Acquiring our 500th library site is indeed an exciting and rewarding time for our team of professionals who diligently put their hearts and souls into the Voyager product and our customer's needs."

Endeavor Information Systems Incorporated is an employee-owned information technology company formed in September, 1994. 500 academic and research libraries of every size have chosen Endeavor's high performance library system.
