

Keyword vs. Subject Searching

Keyword & Subject Searching: Basic Differences

KEYWORD SEARCHING

Looks for words in ANY field within the databases' records (TITLE, AUTHOR, SUBJECT/DESCRIPTOR, and more)

- Searches using normal, everyday words (prozac, not fluoxetine)
- Search box may call this a WORD(S) ANYWHERE search
- Typically broadens a search
- Good with emerging or technical topics (influenza or helix-loop-helix motifs)
- Often finds results that use your search term in a different way than you had intended (banking used in reference to airplanes, not finance)
- Variant spellings and synonyms a problem in searching because a keyword search will only find records using exactly the word(s) you searched (woman will not find women, teenagers will not find adolescents)

SUBJECT SEARCHING

Looks for words ONLY IN the SUBJECT/DESCRIPTOR field

- Searches using words assigned to the topic by "experts" in the subject area or database construction (fluoxetine, not prozac)
- Also known as CONTROLLED VOCABULARY or DESCRIPTOR searches
- Typically narrows a search
- Good with multi-faceted topics (World War, 1939-1945 Aerial operations, American Fiction)
- Finds only results on the topic searched (separate listings for nobility=royalty and nobility of character)
- Can be difficult to find the "right" subject heading/descriptor for your topic (Is it sea mammals, or marine mammals?)
- NOTE: Each database can use its own subject headings and descriptors

Strategies for Effective Keyword & Subject Searching

1. Begin with a keyword search for items on your topic. Be sure to put quotation marks around exact phrases ("animal rights"). See if this search finds even one result that closely matches what you are looking for—for example, "japanese internment"

The screenshot shows a search interface with a search box containing "japanese internment" and a search button. Below the search box, there are buttons for "Save Marked Records" and "Save All On Page". The search results are displayed in a table with columns for "Num", "Mark", "WORDS (1-2 of 2)", and "Year".

Num	Mark	WORDS (1-2 of 2)	Year
1	<input type="checkbox"/>	Captured: the Japanese internment of American civilians in the Philippines, 1941-1945 / Frances B. Cogan , Book Stacks , D805.P6.C63 2000	2000
2	<input type="checkbox"/>	I am an American: a true story of Japanese internment / by Jerry Stanley , Juvenile Stacks , D769.S.A6 S73 1994	1994

Both these books use the word "japanese internment" in their title—but in very different senses. This is one of the problems of keyword searching! The first book is talking about American citizens taken prisoner by the Japanese during World War II, while the second book talks about American citizens or residents of Japanese ancestry who were placed in internment camps by the U.S. government during World War II.

2. Open the record for the results that match your topic. Each record will contain a listing of the subject headings given to the information resource described in that record.

These subject headings can help you construct a much more precise search—as in this example, where there are separate subject headings to describe:

- ▶ World War, 1939-1945 -- Prisoners and prisons, Japanese
- ▶ Japanese Americans -- Evacuation and relocation, 1942-1945

3. Watch for spelling when doing keyword searches. Sometimes you find few results because you are finding only those pages whose misspelling(s) match your own.

In the example below, finding only 5 results for a search about “chemistry” seems kind of odd—until you realize that you’ve misspelled chemistry and found only those records that also had chemsistry.

Keyword search (in entire article content): chemistry

4. When possible, do a broad subject search (animals) and then browse resulting lists of subject sub-headings to see what the options are.

5. If there is an online thesaurus of how words are used as subject headings/descriptors, or an index telling how often particular words are used in a database, consult it for possible search terms.
